How we can help you

We understand that the impacts of stroke are different for every child and family, and that they change as a child gets older.

That's why our dedicated Childhood Stroke Support team is here - to support you with practical information on a wide range of topics and emotional support, whenever you need us.

You can also talk to us about how you are feeling. We're here to listen, and to talk through the things that matter most to you or are on your mind. You can chat with a member of our team by phone, email or video call - whatever works for you.

Whether you're looking for one-off support or feel you would benefit from support on a regular basis, you can talk to us about any questions or concerns you may have, however big or small. Let us help you make sense of your child's stroke and its impacts, and to access support that's available to you.

We'll also help you find further support in your local area, including other specialist support, and help you find other parents online who understand what you're going through. We're also here to support teachers and other professionals to understand more about childhood stroke and its impacts.
