

The Stroke Association is the UK's leading charity dedicated to conquering stroke

We work with people committed to improving the lives of people affected by stroke; with stroke survivors and their families and carers, with health and social care professionals, with stroke support organisations (SSOs) and with scientists and researchers. We believe that together we can conquer stroke.

We want to share our knowledge and experience with new and emerging SSOs around the world.

What is a stroke support organisation (SSO)?

SSOs are non-governmental organisations that address the concerns of stroke survivors, families and carers with a common goal to reduce the negative impact of stroke on individuals, their families and the wider society.

What do stroke support organisations (SSO) do?

SSOs might provide information and advice, peer support, family counselling, rehabilitation therapy or welfare services. Many also engage in awareness campaigning, prevention screening, lobbying for better services, and funding or facilitating stroke research.

If you are interested in setting up or growing an SSO, and you would like to connect with others who are providing stroke support, please contact the International Development Officer for further information, resources, practical guidance and networking.
