Jane called our helpline

Jane Brooks, 47, told us how she couldn’t have got through the anxiety she felt after her stroke without our helpline.

“I went into emotional shock a few weeks after the stroke,” Jane explained.

“I had no idea what had happened, why or how I was meant to feel. I was extremely scared. The woman on the Helpline took time to listen to how I was feeling and answer my questions. She said I could call back at any time. I felt so much better knowing there was someone to help me get through, and things were going to be ok for me.”

If you have had a stroke, or have been affected by stroke, you may have many questions. You may need information, or just someone to talk to. That’s where we can help.

We give practical support

We provide tailored support for stroke survivors and carers from hospital to home and beyond through our Stroke Recovery Service.

Yusra Uney, one of our coordinators, explains: “We’ll meet you while you are in hospital, or you may be referred to us by your social worker or discharge team when you leave.

We work with you in your own home, assess your immediate practical, emotional and physical needs, and can also offer support to your carer and family members close to you. We’ll help you plan and prepare for the future and re-engage with life and your community.”

We also have communication support, emotional support and exercise-based rehabilitation services which are available in some parts of the UK.

These services are largely funded by the health or social care teams in England, Wales and Northern Ireland. They are free to you, but only available in areas where they are commissioned locally.

Reza’s story

Father of two, Reza Curreem-Kalee, had a stroke at 47 which affected his speech and the movement on the left side of his body.

Reza said: “I’m so grateful for the Stroke Association’s support. They helped me arrange for the lift in our building to be fixed so we can access our second floor flat. They also introduced me to a local support group which has done wonders for my confidence. Being with people who understand what stroke is like means I don’t feel judged for using a wheelchair or having difficulties in finding the right words. I had to give up work so it’s great to know I’m receiving the best benefits available and have someone to turn to when times are hard.”
Life After Stroke Grants

When you’ve had a stroke, you might find yourself dealing with money worries on top of everything else. Perhaps you’ve had to give up work for a while or buy things to help with your recovery.
A Life After Stroke Grant could help. It’s a one-off means tested payment of up to £300 for people affected by stroke. You can use it to pay for:

- Some essentials, like furniture, bedding, a freezer or washing machine.
- A short holiday in the UK to help with your recovery.
- A computer, tablet or other technology to help with your communication or any other challenges a stroke brings.
- Things to help with day-to-day life (sometimes called ‘daily living aids’) if they’re not funded by the NHS or social services.

You can call our Stroke Helpline or ask your social worker or any healthcare professional to contact us at Grants.External@stroke.org.uk and we will send an application pack.

We can help you

Justine Smith was 44 when she had a stroke, one week before she was due to go on holiday. A year later, she was still on long-term sick pay and couldn’t afford for herself and her daughter to go away so she applied for a Life After Stroke Grant to help fund her trip.

Justine said: “I was determined to go on that holiday. I don’t know how but we did it. It helped us to wipe away the worst year of our lives and gave an eight-year-old her mummy back. I can never thank the Stroke Association enough.”
We help people get together

Stroke groups and clubs

Meeting others affected by stroke at a group or club can make you feel less isolated or alone. It can help you build your confidence, find practical tips and get useful advice to aid your recovery.

Stroke Association Voluntary Groups
These are support groups led by our trained volunteers, who are often stroke survivors and carers. There are over 150 Stroke Association Voluntary Groups across the UK offering a variety of activities and opportunities including social, creative arts, exercise and gardening.

We also have groups run by and for people with communication difficulties after stroke.

Stroke clubs
These are run independently, although they often affiliate to us. These clubs are usually run by volunteers and they hold regular meetings in local halls or community centres. Each club is different, but most offer a variety of activities such as speakers, outings, art classes, communication and exercise sessions.

To find a club or group near you, call our Helpline or visit stroke.org.uk/finding-support
Erickson Lloyd had a stroke after he collapsed on the London Underground.
He explained: “I really wanted to speak to other people who’d had a stroke. So many things changed for me, I found it hard to follow what my friends and family said and it didn’t feel like my doctors had actually been through it themselves. It was such a relief to make new friends and hear people say ‘oh, you’re at that stage’ when I described the things which were troubling me. I go to my stroke group every week because it makes me feel much less alone and inspires me to do more things I enjoy like cycling.”

We fund pioneering research

Research is essential to finding new treatments and improving existing therapies and care.

Over the last 25 years and thanks to donations from supporters across the UK, we have awarded more than £50 million through 500 research grants.

As a result, more people affected by stroke get better treatment and care.

We know that stroke research doesn’t receive the same investment as other devastating conditions, such as cancer or diabetes. Together with our supporters, we want to change this.

Visit stroke.org.uk/research to find out more.

“The research funded by the Stroke Association has improved stroke rehabilitation immeasurably and patient care has improved as a result.”

Professor Marion Walker, University of Nottingham
“We want people in power to hear the concerns of stroke survivors.”

Alexis Kolodziej, Deputy Director, Policy and Influencing
We take action

We campaign to improve stroke treatment and care

Currently, not everyone who has a stroke receives the right care and support.

Through our campaigns, we are working to make sure all stroke survivors receive the right treatment and support at the right time.

Find out how you can get involved with our campaigning work. With your help, we can support people to rebuild their lives after stroke.

Stroke changes lives in an instant

Many strokes can be prevented. That’s why our work includes campaigns to raise the awareness of risk factors for stroke.

• Know Your Blood Pressure events across the UK offer free blood pressure testing, information and advice on healthy living.
• We campaign to raise awareness of atrial fibrillation, a major risk factor.
• We support the Act FAST campaign to help people recognise stroke as a medical emergency.

Why support us?

Stroke is sudden and devastating and strikes every five minutes in the UK. Strokes happen in the brain and that impacts different areas of your body, identity and your whole life. A stroke can take away your speech, your ability to walk, your memory and your independence.

We need your help to provide life-changing support to stroke survivors and their loved ones. The need for stroke support is enormous and we have to do more.

We believe:
• Strokes can and should be prevented.
• Everyone has the right to make the best recovery they can.
• Research has the power to save lives.
• Recovery is possible, but it’s a long, hard journey needing the right specialist support and lots of courage and determination. It’s a team effort: us, stroke survivors, supporters and the whole stroke community. It’s about adapting to a new normal.

Every five minutes stroke destroys lives. Your support can help us rebuild them.

Our Life After Stroke Award winners, Marvin, Marcia and Bethany lost their mum, Jean Fray, to a stroke. Less than 24 hours earlier, the family had been celebrating together at Marcia’s wedding. Three weeks later, on the day of Jean’s funeral, Marvin, Marcia and Bethany’s maternal grandmother, Audrey, sadly also passed away from a stroke.

Since then, they’ve dedicated themselves to helping us support people affected and at risk of stroke.

Marcia explains “We want to help stroke survivors and families, and to fund more stroke research. Anytime we do a challenge, we try to turn it into a fundraising opportunity”
When stroke strikes, part of your brain shuts down. And so does a part of you. Life changes instantly and recovery is tough. But the brain can adapt. Our specialist support, research and campaigning are only possible with the courage and determination of the stroke community. With more donations and support from you, we can rebuild even more lives.
